WELCOME TO DRAGONSFALL

There was a time when dragons shaped the world.

They raised cities beyond imagination, carved kingdoms into mountains, and left behind wonders that endured for ages.

Though time, war, and greed have claimed much of their legacy, countless ruins still lie hidden beneath the forests, mountains, and seas of Faerûn.

Across the Sea of Swords, abandoned dragon lairs filled with unimaginable treasure have drawn explorers, merchants, pirates, scholars, and fortune seekers from every corner of the world.

Some call it the greatest age of discovery.
Others believe something far older has begun to awaken.

WELCOME TO THE DRAGONSFALL

*A world of forgotten kingdoms....

Ancient Treasure...

...and adventures waiting beyond the

USING THIS GUIDE

This guide is intended for players beginning a Dragonsfall campaign. It contains the history, traditions, rumors, and common knowledge that an adventurer living in Faerûn might reasonably possess before setting sail upon the Sea of Swords.

WHAT THIS GUIDE CONTAINS

Within these pages, you will find information about:

- The world following Tiamat's defeat
- The disappearance of dragonkind
- The great treasure rush
- Port Jeuno and life upon its docks
- Ships, crews, navigation, and the dangers of the sea
- Ideas for creating a character connected to the setting

WHAT THIS GUIDE DOES NOT TELL YOU

The greatest discoveries of Dragonsfall are meant to be uncovered through play.

Some questions have no answers within these pages. Others may not have the answers you expect. What your character believes on the first day of the campaign may be very different from what they know by the last.

This guide is intentionally spoiler-free. It introduces the world as its people commonly understand it without revealing the deeper mysteries waiting beyond the horizon.

COMMON KNOWLEDGE

Everything presented in this guide represents information that is generally known, widely believed, or commonly repeated throughout the Sea of Swords.

Not every story is true.

Not every rumor is false.

History changes with every retelling, and even respected scholars disagree about the events that shaped the modern world. Discovering the difference between truth, legend, and deliberate deception is part of the adventure.

BEFORE YOU BEGIN

Speak with your Game Master about:

- The tone and style of the campaign
- How the characters know one another
- The ship or crew they may join
- Any rules or character options specific to the campaign
- What drew each character to Port Jeuno and the treasure rush

Above all, arrive ready to explore. Dragonsfall rewards curiosity, initiative, and characters willing to become part of the world around them.

A WORD TO ADVENTURERS

Every map begins with empty seas.

Do not be afraid to sail beyond the places marked safe. The greatest stories are rarely found where everyone else is looking.

"Every chart ends where courage begins."

— A saying among the sailors of Port Jeuno

WHAT YOUR CHARACTER KNOWS

COMMON KNOWLEDGE ACROSS THE SEA OF SWORDS

A WORLD AFTER TIAMAT

Only a year has passed since the world stood on the brink of destruction.

Tiamat, the Dragon Queen, threatened all of Faerûn until five legendary heroes rose to challenge her. Against impossible odds, they emerged victorious, bringing an end to a conflict that had threatened to consume the world.

Yet their victory came with an unanswered mystery.

The five heroes vanished following Tiamat's defeat. No bodies were recovered, and no explanation has ever been given for their disappearance. Though celebrated as saviors, their ultimate fate remains unknown.

In the year since, kingdoms have begun rebuilding, trade routes have reopened, and ordinary life has slowly returned. Yet the dragons that once filled the skies have all but disappeared, leaving behind abandoned lairs and the remnants of ancient civilizations.

THE DRAGONSFALL

The disappearance of dragonkind has brought about an unexpected age of opportunity.

Across Faerûn, stories of abandoned dragon lairs and unimaginable treasure have sparked a great rush of exploration.

Some expeditions return carrying ancient relics, precious gems, and enough gold to change their fortunes forever. Others vanish without a trace.

Merchants finance voyages, scholars seek forgotten knowledge, and adventurers travel from distant lands hoping to claim their share of the riches.

For many, the Dragonsfall represents the greatest opportunity of their lifetime.

THE SEA OF SWORDS

The Sea of Swords has become the heart of this growing treasure rush.

Merchant vessels, naval warships, pirate crews, and independent explorers sail its waters in search of wealth and opportunity.

Beyond the familiar shipping routes lie uncharted islands, dangerous reefs, forgotten ruins, and waters where even experienced captains hesitate to sail.

For those willing to risk the journey, the sea promises both fortune and adventure.

PORT JEUNO

Few places have benefited from the treasure rush as greatly as Port Jeuno.

Already an important trading port, the city has rapidly become a gathering place for explorers, merchants, sailors, scholars, and fortune seekers from across Faerûn.

Ships arrive carrying strange relics and stories of distant discoveries. Taverns overflow with rumors, merchants compete for rare treasures, and captains seek capable hands for their next expedition.

New businesses have appeared almost overnight, and fortunes are made and lost along the crowded docks.

Whether seeking employment, passage aboard a ship, or the beginning of a new life, many adventurers eventually find their way to Jeuno.

LEGENDS AND SUPERSTITIONS

Not everything known about the world comes from history books.

Sailors tell stories of ghost ships wandering through unnatural mists, ancient ruins protected by forgotten magic, and creatures lurking beneath the waves.

Some believe the abandoned dragon lairs are cursed. Others insist that the dragons left behind treasures meant never to be disturbed.

With the disappearance of dragonkind still fresh in living memory, many wonder whether their absence is truly a blessing.

Most dismiss such tales as superstition, though few sailors are willing to tempt fate when far from shore.

In the Sea of Swords, rumors often travel faster than the ships that carry them.

WHAT DOES YOUR CHARACTER BELIEVE?

Not everyone sees the Dragonsfall in the same way.

Some consider it the greatest opportunity of their lifetime. Others believe disturbing the abandoned lairs of dragons is a dangerous mistake.

What does your character believe happened to the five heroes?

Do they seek fortune, adventure, knowledge, or something else entirely?

And what would convince them that everything they believed was wrong?

"Every fortune begins with a voyage."

— A common saying in Port Jeuno

PART I — THE WORLD

A NEW AGE OF EXPLORATION

A WORLD IN TRANSITION

The world has survived, but it has not yet recovered.

Only a year has passed since Tiamat's defeat, and across Faerûn, the scars of that conflict remain. Kingdoms struggle to rebuild, communities mourn those they have lost, and many who once lived beneath the threat of destruction are only beginning to imagine what their futures might hold.

Yet even as the world recovers, a new age of opportunity has begun.

With dragonkind largely absent, territories once considered too dangerous to approach are opening to exploration. Ancient ruins, forgotten mountain strongholds, and abandoned lairs have become destinations for those seeking wealth, knowledge, and adventure.

For the first time in living memory, places once ruled by dragons stand seemingly unguarded.

RECOVERY AND PROSPERITY

The aftermath of Tiamat's defeat has affected every region differently.

Some cities have prospered as trade routes reopen and merchants resume their journeys. Others continue to struggle with damaged infrastructure, lost livelihoods, and the costs of rebuilding.

The Dragonsfall has only widened these differences.

Ports serving as departure points for treasure expeditions experience sudden growth. Shipbuilders, merchants, innkeepers, and traders find themselves overwhelmed with new customers.

Meanwhile, communities far from the great trade routes may see little benefit from the riches being recovered.

For some, this is the beginning of a golden age.

For others, survival remains the greatest concern.

WEALTH AND AMBITION

The discovery of abandoned dragon hoards has introduced extraordinary wealth into the markets of Faerûn.

Ancient coins, precious gemstones, forgotten artifacts, and magical treasures are changing hands at an unprecedented pace.

Merchants compete to finance successful expeditions. Nobles seek rare relics to expand their collections, while scholars offer generous rewards for discoveries that might illuminate the ancient world.

Not everyone welcomes these changes.

Established merchants fear losing their influence to newly wealthy adventurers. Rival expeditions compete for the same discoveries, and disputes over ownership have become increasingly common.

The Dragonsfall promises opportunity, but it has also awakened ambition.

A CHANGING BALANCE OF POWER

The disappearance of dragons has altered more than the fortunes of treasure hunters.

For centuries, the presence of powerful dragons influenced where settlements could safely expand, which mountain passes remained dangerous, and what territories were best left undisturbed.

Now, those boundaries are being challenged.

Explorers venture into regions previously considered forbidden. Merchants seek new routes through once-dangerous territory, and ambitious individuals look toward lands that may hold valuable resources or forgotten treasures.

Yet an abandoned territory is not necessarily a safe one.

Dangerous creatures, ancient defenses, and competing treasure hunters remain threats to anyone who ventures too far without preparation.

THE PEOPLE OF FAERÛN

Not everyone has joined the treasure rush.

Farmers still tend their fields. Craftspeople continue their trades. Soldiers guard roads and settlements, while families work to rebuild lives interrupted by the conflict.

For many ordinary people, the Dragonsfall is something experienced through rumors, traveling merchants, and stories told in crowded taverns.

Some dream of abandoning their old lives and seeking fortune across the sea.

Others view the growing obsession with dragon treasure as reckless, believing that the world should focus on rebuilding rather than chasing riches.

Both perspectives can be found throughout Faerûn.

THE PROMISE OF TOMORROW

No one can say what the world will look like in another year.

New fortunes are being made, forgotten places are being rediscovered, and opportunities once thought impossible are appearing across the land and sea.

For those willing to leave behind the familiar, the possibilities seem endless.

The world is changing faster than anyone expected.

And for a new generation of adventurers, there has never been a more exciting—or uncertain—time to set out into the unknown.

A WORLD OF OPPORTUNITY

Your character does not need to begin as an experienced explorer or treasure hunter.

They might be a former soldier seeking a new purpose, a merchant hoping to rebuild a family fortune, a scholar pursuing forgotten knowledge, or an ordinary person drawn toward the promise of adventure.

Whatever their past, the changing world offers them a chance to forge a new future.

THE DRAGONSFALL

THE GREATEST TREASURE RUSH IN HISTORY

AN AGE OF OPPORTUNITY

What began as scattered reports of abandoned dragon lairs has become a movement sweeping across Faerûn.

The first successful expeditions returned with stories that seemed impossible: chambers overflowing with ancient coins, weapons forged in forgotten ages, and magical treasures untouched for centuries.

As word spread, others followed.

Independent adventurers, merchant companies, pirates, scholars, mercenaries, and noble-sponsored expeditions began searching for the riches left behind by dragonkind.

Soon, the phenomenon acquired a name.

The Dragonsfall.

To some, it represents the greatest opportunity in living memory. To others, it is a dangerous obsession drawing countless people toward places that were never meant to be disturbed.

Neither view has slowed the rush.

THE PRICE OF DISCOVERY

Not every expedition returns wealthy.

Some discover lairs that have already been emptied. Others encounter dangerous creatures that have claimed abandoned ruins as their own.

Ancient traps, collapsing passages, hostile treasure hunters, and treacherous journeys claim as many fortunes as they create.

Even a successful expedition faces difficulties.

Treasure must be transported, protected, identified, and sold. A captain returning with a hold full of ancient valuables may attract more attention than one returning empty-handed.

Wealth brings opportunity.

It also brings rivals.

A NEW KIND OF ADVENTURER

The Dragonsfall has created opportunities for people from nearly every walk of life.

Expeditions require more than courage and a sharp blade. They depend on navigators, translators, scouts, healers, craftspeople, and countless others whose skills may prove invaluable far from civilization. The Dragonsfall has created a place for talents that traditional tales of adventuring often overlook.

Others are drawn by curiosity rather than wealth.

They seek forgotten histories, undiscovered lands, or simply the freedom of a life beyond familiar shores.

For many adventurers, the greatest reward is not the treasure itself.

It is the possibility of becoming someone they never imagined they could be.

RIVALRIES AND REPUTATION

As expeditions multiply, competition grows.

Captains race to reach newly discovered islands. Merchants compete for exclusive rights to recovered treasures. Rival crews trade rumors, conceal maps, and occasionally resort to violence when fortune is at stake.

A successful expedition can earn a crew considerable recognition.

A reputation for courage, fairness, or reliability may lead to better contracts and valuable allies. A reputation for cruelty or dishonesty can be equally powerful, though it may close as many doors as it opens.

Throughout the Sea of Swords, a captain's name can become almost as valuable as the treasure aboard their ship.

A TREASURE HUNTER'S ADVICE

A map may lead you to treasure, but it will not tell you who else is following it.

Choose your crew carefully, keep your supplies stocked, and never assume an abandoned lair is truly empty.

BEYOND GOLD

Although treasure drives the Dragonsfall, its influence reaches far beyond wealth.

Ancient discoveries are challenging long-held beliefs about the past. Forgotten writings, unfamiliar artifacts, and the remains of civilizations once hidden beneath the shadow of dragonkind are finding their way into the hands of scholars and collectors. Each discovery raises new questions, and every expedition brings back stories that inspire others to seek answers of their own.

No one knows how long the treasure rush will last.

For now, the horizon remains full of possibilities.

THE SEA OF SWORDS

FORTUNE BEYOND THE HORIZON

THE HEART OF THE DRAGONSFALL

Stretching along the western shores of Faerûn, the Sea of Swords has become the center of the great treasure rush.

Its waters connect bustling ports, distant islands, established trade routes, and countless opportunities for those willing to brave the open sea.

Every day, ships depart in search of forgotten dragon lairs, ancient ruins, and treasures that might change their fortunes forever.

Some sail under the banners of powerful nations. Others belong to merchant companies, independent captains, or crews seeking a life beyond the authority of any kingdom.

Among them sail pirates, smugglers, and opportunists eager to claim the riches of others.

The sea belongs to no single adventurer.

But its treasures are available to anyone bold enough to seek them.

BEYOND THE CHARTED WATERS

Experienced navigators know the established routes between major ports. Beyond those familiar passages, however, lie waters that are less thoroughly explored.

Islands rise from the sea, some inhabited and others seemingly untouched. Dangerous reefs threaten careless captains, while hidden coves offer shelter to pirates and smugglers.

Old ruins can be found along forgotten coastlines, and stories of ancient treasures continue to draw explorers farther from civilization.

For those who venture beyond familiar routes, reliable maps are among the most valuable possessions aboard a ship.

Yet even the finest chart cannot account for every danger.

THE DANGERS OF THE SEA

The Sea of Swords is as dangerous as it is beautiful.

Sudden storms can scatter fleets and drive ships far from their intended course. Dangerous creatures inhabit the waters, while pirates patrol routes frequented by wealthy merchants.

Even ordinary voyages carry risks.

A damaged hull, dwindling supplies, or an inexperienced crew can turn a promising expedition into a desperate struggle for survival.

Successful captains learn to respect the sea rather than underestimate it.

They prepare carefully, listen to experienced sailors, and understand that retreat is sometimes wiser than pressing forward.

LIFE BETWEEN PORTS

For many who sail the Sea of Swords, a ship becomes more than a means of transportation.

It is a home, a livelihood, and a place where lasting friendships are forged.

Crews share meals, stories, responsibilities, and the dangers of the voyage. Sailors learn to depend upon one another, for even the strongest warrior cannot command a ship alone.

A vessel may carry adventurers from one treasure hunt to another, but the experiences shared along the way often become the stories remembered longest.

THE CALL OF ADVENTURE

The Sea of Swords offers no guarantee of riches.

For every captain who returns with legendary treasure, others return with little more than stories, scars, and damaged sails.

Yet the ships continue to depart.

Beyond the horizon lie islands waiting to be explored, ruins waiting to be uncovered, and fortunes waiting to be claimed.

For some, that promise is worth any danger.

"The sea owes you nothing. Everything you bring home is earned."

— A sailor's proverb

PART II — PORT JEUNO

GATEWAY TO THE DRAGONSFALL

A CITY OF OPPORTUNITY

Before the Dragonsfall, Port Jeuno was a modest harbor town serving as a checkpoint and resupply station along the Sea of Swords.

Its central location made it a convenient stop for merchant vessels, but few imagined what it would become.

Following Tiamat's defeat, expeditions began returning with riches from abandoned dragon lairs. Recognizing Jeuno's potential, wealthy merchants, trading companies, and successful adventurers invested their fortunes in its expansion.

With the aid of magic, new docks, warehouses, streets, and stone buildings rose in mere months.

Within a year, the quiet port had become a prosperous small city.

Today, Jeuno welcomes sailors, merchants, scholars, and adventurers from across Faerûn, all seeking their share of the Dragonsfall.

THE HARBOR

The harbor remains the heart of Port Jeuno.

Old wooden piers stand beside new stone docks, while modest warehouses share the waterfront with impressive trading houses.

Ships arrive carrying passengers, supplies, and recovered treasures. Others depart with fresh provisions, new crews, and maps promising unimaginable riches.

The docks are rarely quiet. Workers unload cargo, merchants negotiate prices, and captains recruit sailors for their next voyage.

News travels quickly. A successful expedition may become tavern gossip before its cargo has even been unloaded.

For anyone seeking adventure, the harbor is a natural place to begin.

NEUTRAL GROUND

Port Jeuno's neutrality attracts crews of differing loyalties and ambitions.

Merchants, independent explorers, naval representatives, and fortune seekers conduct business within the same city.

Much of Jeuno's expansion was financed by merchants who recognized the value of a harbor open to every nation and allegiance. Their wealth helped build the city, and their influence remains strong.

Yet neutrality does not eliminate rivalry.

Competition for maps, contracts, and valuable discoveries creates tensions between even respectable expeditions.

Still, Jeuno remains a place where those who might be enemies elsewhere can find common ground in trade.

MAKING A LIVING IN JEUNO

The treasure rush has created demand for far more than swords and armor.

Ships need repairs, provisions, navigators, and sailors. Expeditions hire guards, healers, translators, and scouts.

Jeuno's rapid growth also provides work for builders, craftspeople, laborers, and spellcasters.

Not everyone seeking fortune must discover a dragon's hoard. Some earn their living supplying those who do.

Others dream of saving enough coin to purchase a ship and become captains themselves.

THE BEGINNING OF A JOURNEY

For an unknown adventurer, Port Jeuno offers something increasingly rare.

A chance.

Someone arriving with little money and no reputation may find employment aboard a ship, earn a captain's trust, and begin building a name of their own.

Opportunities are plentiful, though success is never guaranteed.

Every voyage begins somewhere.

For countless treasure hunters, that place is Port Jeuno.

DISTRICTS OF THE CITY

HOUGH PORT JEUNO HAS GROWN RAPIDLY SINCE the Dragonsfall began, much of its original layout remains recognizable.

The city is divided into three major districts: the Harbor District, the Market District, and the Living District. Each serves a different purpose, though the steady movement of merchants, sailors, and adventurers keeps their streets closely connected.

Old wooden buildings stand beside newly raised stone structures, while construction continues wherever space and opportunity allow.

For newcomers, learning the districts is often the first step toward finding work, supplies, or a place to rest.

THE HARBOR DISTRICT

The Harbor District is the oldest and busiest part of Port Jeuno.

Once a modest checkpoint for passing vessels, its waterfront now stretches across newly constructed docks and warehouses built to accommodate the growing number of ships arriving each day.

Merchant vessels unload goods from distant lands while expedition crews prepare for journeys across the Sea of Swords.

Smaller boats are regularly offered for rent or sale, and captains searching for sailors can often be found near the docks.

Large inns provide simple accommodations for travelers departing the following morning.

Among them is Aurochs Slumber, a popular stopping place offering a warm meal and a bed without unnecessary luxuries.

LUCA DOCKS

Named for Jeuno's original ruling house, Luca Docks forms the center of the harbor's daily activity.

Cargo is unloaded, passengers disembark, and ships prepare for their next voyages.

KILIKA SHIPYARDS

Shipbuilders, sailmakers, and repair crews work throughout this busy stretch of waterfront.

House Besaid maintains a strong presence here, overseeing much of Jeuno's shipbuilding, repairs, and vessel rentals.

ANCHOR'S END

Beyond the busiest docks lies a lively collection of taverns, boardinghouses, and gathering places frequented by sailors and adventurers.

Crew recruitment is common here, and job notices appear wherever captains believe willing hands might gather.

Near the road leading toward the Market District stands Adventurers Blitz, a rowdy tavern known for its adventuring clientele and frequently updated job postings.

THE MARKET DISTRICT

If the harbor is Jeuno's heart, the Market District is its lifeblood.

Here, merchants from across Faerûn sell goods both familiar and extraordinary.

Colorful stalls display foreign foods, fine clothing, weapons, tools, and curiosities. Shops offer magical items and recovered relics, while traders negotiate contracts over cargo arriving from distant ports.

The district owes much of its growth to wealthy merchant houses that invested heavily in Jeuno following the Dragonsfall.

House Al Bhed is known for magical goods, recovered treasures, and unusual inventions combining magic with technology.

House Ronso, a clan of Goliath merchants, is a prominent name in food imports, clothing, and everyday trade.

GUADO MARKET

Guado Market is the busiest shopping area in Jeuno.

Visitors can find everything from common provisions to exotic merchandise brought across the seas.

MACHINA ROW

Dealers in recovered treasures, magical curiosities, and experimental inventions conduct business along this prosperous stretch of the district.

House Al Bhed's influence is especially visible here, where magic and technology frequently meet.

A discovery brought ashore in the morning may find a buyer before sunset.

LIFE IN PORT JEUNO

THE EXCHANGE

The Exchange is the center of Jeuno's commercial affairs, where merchants arrange shipments, negotiate contracts, and finance new ventures.

Offices belonging to the city's influential trading houses line its streets, alongside counting houses and businesses offering services to visiting captains and merchants.

House Besaid oversees much of Jeuno's shipping, shipbuilding, and vessel rentals. House Al Bhed specializes in magical goods, recovered relics, and unusual inventions, while House Ronso supplies imported foods, clothing, and everyday necessities.

Those seeking financial backing for an expedition or wishing to arrange the sale of valuable cargo often begin their business here.

Among the district's finer establishments is Duggles Rest, an elegant inn offering private baths, spacious accommodations, and a grand ballroom used for festivities and gatherings.

THE LIVING DISTRICT

Beyond the bustling markets lies the Living District, home to the people who have made Jeuno more than a temporary stopping place.

Here, narrow residential streets and closely packed houses stand alongside newer homes built during the city's rapid expansion.

Wealthy merchants and successful adventurers have constructed impressive estates, while workers, sailors, and growing families occupy more modest residences.

Small homes are also available for rent, offering newcomers an opportunity to settle in Jeuno without purchasing property of their own.

Though quieter than the harbor or markets, the Living District remains an active part of the growing city.

HEARTHSTONE

Hearthstone is one of Jeuno's principal residential neighborhoods.

Its streets are lined with family homes, small rental properties, and local businesses serving the people who live nearby.

Some buildings date back to Jeuno's days as a modest port town, while others were constructed only recently to accommodate the growing population.

For those hoping to make a permanent home in Jeuno, Hearthstone is often the first place to look.

THE CALM

The Calm offers a welcome retreat from the crowded streets of the harbor and markets.

Public squares and small gardens provide places for residents to gather, relax, and enjoy the city's quieter moments.

Families, travelers, and merchants can often be found sharing conversation here, far from the noise of arriving ships and busy trading stalls.

Despite Jeuno's rapid growth, The Calm remains a place where its people can enjoy a measure of peace.

HIGHWATCH

Overlooking much of the city, Highwatch is home to Jeuno's government and some of its wealthiest residents.

Grand estates belonging to successful merchants and retired adventurers stand near Luca Keep, the ancestral residence of House Luca.

Unlike the newer mansions surrounding it, the keep has stood since before the Dragonsfall, when Jeuno was little more than a maritime checkpoint.

LUCA KEEP

From Luca Keep, Bickson Luca, head of House Luca, oversees the city his family has governed since long before its sudden rise to prosperity.

The house maintains Jeuno's neutrality through its city guard, known as the Luca Goers.

Commanded by Abus Luca, Bickson's cousin, the guard patrols the city's streets and ensures that visitors respect its laws.

Though Jeuno welcomes people of every allegiance, the peace maintained by House Luca is expected to be respected by all.

LAWS AND NEUTRALITY

PORT JEUNO HAS BECOME A GATHERING PLACE FOR people whose loyalties, beliefs, and ambitions might place them at odds elsewhere in Faerûn.

Naval officers share its streets with independent captains. Merchants negotiate with former rivals, while adventurers of every background seek their fortunes beneath the same banners.

Such an arrangement would be impossible without one understanding.

Within Port Jeuno, the peace must be respected.

A HARBOR FOR ALL

Jeuno welcomes travelers regardless of their homeland, allegiance, or reputation.

Merchants, sailors, adventurers, and representatives of distant powers are permitted to conduct business within the city, provided they obey its laws.

Disputes carried from foreign shores have no place in Jeuno's streets.

Two captains who might exchange cannon fire at sea may find themselves negotiating across the same table once safely within the harbor.

Neither is expected to abandon their loyalties.

Both are expected to respect Jeuno's neutrality.

THE RIGHT TO TRADE

Fair trade is among the principles upon which Jeuno's prosperity depends.

Merchants are free to offer goods and services, negotiate prices, and establish agreements with willing customers.

From common provisions to rare magical artifacts, commerce flourishes because traders trust that their business can be conducted without violence or intimidation.

Information is treated much the same way.

Maps, rumors, discoveries, and the locations of forgotten treasures may be freely shared, sold, or kept secret.

In Jeuno, knowledge can be worth as much as gold.

THE LUCA GOERS

The responsibility of maintaining order falls to the Luca Goers, the city guard serving House Luca.

Under the command of Abus Luca, the Goers patrol the harbor, markets, and residential streets, ensuring that disputes do not threaten the city's peace.

Jeuno is no stranger to rowdy sailors or adventurers celebrating a successful voyage.

Minor scuffles and tavern brawls may occasionally be overlooked, provided they end quickly and cause little harm.

More serious offenses are another matter.

Killing within the city or causing major destruction of property brings immediate arrest.

Neither wealth nor allegiance grants a visitor permission to endanger Jeuno's people.

CONTRACTS AND EMPLOYMENT

Work can be found throughout Port Jeuno.

Public notice boards display requests from merchants, ship captains, residents, and adventurers seeking assistance.

Some offer simple labor or deliveries. Others promise substantial rewards for dangerous expeditions beyond the harbor.

Official postings from House Luca and the city's prominent merchant houses can also be found among these notices.

Those seeking more specialized work may visit Djose's Guild, an adventurers' guild where expedition contracts, rumors, and opportunities are gathered.

Not every offer promises fortune, and travelers are wise to understand an agreement before accepting it.

PEACE ABOVE RIVALRY

Port Jeuno's neutrality does not make its inhabitants friends.

Competition, suspicion, and old grudges remain common among those drawn to the Dragonsfall.

Yet within the city's boundaries, even bitter rivals are expected to settle their differences without bloodshed.

For as long as House Luca maintains that peace, Jeuno remains a place where opportunity matters more than allegiance.

TAVERNS, MARKETS, AND SERVICES

PORT JEUNO OFFERS FAR MORE THAN A PLACE TO dock a ship. Inns, taverns, merchants, and guilds serve the thousands who pass through its streets in search of fortune.

Whether seeking a warm bed, reliable supplies, a new crew, or information about distant treasures, visitors rarely need to look far.

AUROCHS SLUMBER

Harbor District — Luca Docks

Among the largest inns near Jeuno's waterfront, Aurochs Slumber caters primarily to sailors and travelers making brief stops between voyages.

Its accommodations are simple but comfortable, offering clean beds, quick meals, and a place to rest before returning to sea.

Guests come and go at nearly every hour, and the common rooms are often filled with tired sailors sharing stories of their journeys.

Those seeking luxury may look elsewhere, but for a dependable night's sleep near the docks, Aurochs Slumber is a familiar choice.

ADVENTURERS BLITZ

Harbor District — Anchor's End

Few taverns in Jeuno are as lively as Adventurers Blitz.

Located along the road toward the Market District, the tavern attracts treasure hunters, mercenaries, sailors, and captains searching for capable crew members.

Loud conversations, celebrations, and arguments are common, particularly when a successful expedition returns to port.

Job notices cover the tavern's boards, offering everything from short-term employment to dangerous voyages across the Sea of Swords.

For an adventurer seeking companions, work, or the latest rumors, Adventurers Blitz is an excellent place to begin.

DUGGLES REST

Market District — The Exchange

For visitors seeking more refined accommodations, Duggles Rest offers comforts rarely found among Jeuno's waterfront inns.

Spacious rooms, private baths, and attentive service attract successful merchants, wealthy travelers, and established adventurers.

Its grand ballroom regularly hosts celebrations, social gatherings, and festivities attended by some of Jeuno's more prosperous residents.

Though its prices are higher than most establishments, Duggles Rest has earned a reputation as one of the city's finer places to stay.

DJOSE'S GUILD

Harbor District — Anchor's End

Near the road connecting Anchor's End to Guado Market stands Djose's Guild, a respected gathering place for adventurers seeking work and opportunity.

Founded by Djose, a wealthy and highly regarded wizard, the guild welcomes those interested in expeditions, contracts, and the exchange of information.

Despite his considerable fortune, Djose chose an accessible location rather than the wealthy merchant quarters.

Having risen from humble beginnings himself, he understands the value of giving unknown adventurers somewhere to begin.

The guild maintains information on available work, expedition opportunities, and requests from those seeking capable assistance.

Unlike the rowdy atmosphere of Adventurers Blitz, Djose's Guild offers a more organized setting for those wishing to discuss contracts and prepare for their next undertaking.

MARKETS AND EVERYDAY SERVICES

Beyond these well-known establishments, Jeuno offers nearly everything a traveler might require.

Guado Market provides food, clothing, tools, and provisions from distant lands. Along Machina Row, merchants offer magical curiosities, recovered relics, and unusual inventions.

Those preparing for a voyage can visit Kilika Shipyards for repairs and maritime services, while The Exchange provides opportunities to arrange shipments and negotiate commercial agreements.

Whatever brings someone to Port Jeuno, its merchants and craftspeople are rarely far away.

FINDING WORK

FOR MANY WHO ARRIVE IN PORT JEUNO, THE FIRST question is not where to stay, but how to earn their next meal.

The Dragonsfall has brought countless opportunities to the Sea of Swords, and Jeuno has become a gathering place for those willing to pursue them.

From ordinary labor to dangerous expeditions, work can be found by anyone prepared to seek it.

PUBLIC NOTICE BOARDS

Throughout Jeuno, public notice boards display requests from residents, merchants, ship captains, and travelers.

Some postings seek assistance with deliveries, repairs, or transporting goods. Others call for escorts, capable sailors, or adventurers willing to investigate distant locations.

Official notices from House Luca and the city's prominent merchant houses appear alongside private offers.

Most postings provide a way to contact the employer, allowing interested adventurers to discuss the work and negotiate terms directly.

No guild membership is required to accept these independent contracts.

WORKING FOR THE MERCHANT HOUSES

Jeuno's three major merchant houses regularly have business requiring outside assistance.

House Besaid offers opportunities connected to shipping, vessel operations, and maritime trade.

House Al Bhed deals in magical artifacts, recovered relics, and unusual machina, sometimes requiring assistance with their acquisition or transport.

House Ronso conducts extensive trade in food, clothing, and everyday goods, creating opportunities for escorts, deliveries, and other commercial work.

Such employment may be brief or involve journeys far beyond the harbor.

CONTRACTS THROUGH DJOSE'S GUILD

Those seeking more organized opportunities may turn to Djose's Guild in Anchor's End.

Founded by the respected wizard Djose, the guild gathers contracts, expedition requests, and information for adventurers seeking employment.

Membership is required to accept contracts offered through the guild, but joining is deliberately affordable.

A one-time fee of 1 gold piece per member grants membership without recurring dues.

For contracts completed through the guild, 10% of the earned reward goes to Djose's Guild.

Adventurers are encouraged to understand the terms of a contract before accepting it, particularly when the promised reward is something other than coin.

WORK ABOARD SHIPS

The docks offer another path to employment.

Captains frequently seek sailors, guards, navigators, and additional hands for voyages across the Sea of Swords.

Some crews require only temporary assistance, while others welcome those willing to remain aboard for longer journeys.

Not every ship sails in search of dragon treasure. Merchant vessels, supply ships, and independent captains all have reasons to hire capable travelers.

For those without a vessel of their own, joining a crew may be the simplest way to begin exploring the world beyond Jeuno.

REWARDS BEYOND GOLD

Coin is common payment, but it is far from the only reward offered in Port Jeuno.

A contract might promise a valuable item, an unusual artifact, a map to an unexplored destination, or information about a forgotten treasure.

Some rewards may prove more valuable than their weight in gold, particularly to adventurers pursuing the mysteries of the Dragonsfall.

Jeuno maintains no formal ranking system for adventurers. Reputation is earned through deeds, fulfilled promises, and the stories others tell.

In Port Jeuno, even an unknown traveler may find an opportunity worth pursuing.

FAMOUS CAPTAINS

HE SEA OF SWORDS IS HOME TO COUNTLESS captains, each commanding a vessel in pursuit of trade, discovery, fortune, or something far more personal.

Some earn their reputations through years of dependable service. Others become famous for extraordinary accomplishments, dangerous voyages, or stories that grow with every retelling.

In Port Jeuno, the names of certain captains are known even to those who have never set foot aboard a ship.

CAPTAIN BEATRIX

Captain of the Komatsu

Among the experienced sailors of the Sea of Swords, few command respect as readily as Captain Beatrix.

A former naval captain, Beatrix is known for her composure, discipline, and considerable experience at sea. She carries herself with the quiet confidence of someone who has weathered more than her share of dangerous voyages.

Unlike captains who seek attention through extravagant displays of wealth or strength, Beatrix has little need to boast of her accomplishments.

Her reputation rests upon her ability to command a crew, make difficult decisions, and remain calm when circumstances turn against her.

Those who mistake her reserved demeanor for weakness seldom make the same mistake twice.

THE KOMATSU

Beatrix commands the Komatsu, a vessel whose name is familiar among sailors and merchants traveling through Port Jeuno.

Serving alongside her is Steiner, her lifelong companion and trusted first mate.

Together, they maintain a disciplined crew accustomed to the demands of life upon the Sea of Swords.

For adventurers seeking employment aboard a capable vessel, the Komatsu represents an opportunity to learn from experienced sailors and discover what lies beyond Jeuno's harbor.

CAPTAIN GARLAND THE FIERCE

Captain of the Pandemonium

Few names inspire as much unease among treasure hunters as Captain Garland the Fierce.

Stories of Garland circulate throughout the ports of the Sea of Swords, though reliable accounts are difficult to separate from rumor.

He is rarely seen without his imposing plate armor and heavy cloak, leaving even his appearance a subject of speculation.

Some describe him as a relentless treasure hunter. Others claim he pursues destinations that ordinary captains would never dare approach.

Whatever the truth, Garland's reputation is enough to make even experienced sailors reconsider their course.

THE PANDEMONIUM

Garland commands one of the most extraordinary vessels known to sail the Sea of Swords.

The Pandemonium is a massive ship constructed primarily from iron and steel, unlike the wooden vessels commonly found throughout the region.

More remarkable still, the Pandemonium is capable of leaving the water entirely, rising into the sky and traveling above the waves.

The sight of its imposing silhouette has become the subject of countless stories.

For some, the ship is a marvel of engineering and magic. For others, it is a warning that something dangerous may be approaching.

A CAPTAIN OF MANY RUMORS

Few agree upon Garland's ambitions, and fewer still claim to know him personally.

Some treasure hunters speak of arriving at forgotten ruins only to discover that Garland and his crew had already passed through.

Whether such stories are true remains uncertain.

What is certain is that the appearance of the Pandemonium rarely goes unnoticed.

FAMOUS CAPTAINS

ONTINUED

CAPTAIN CID

Captain of the GullWing

Where some captains earn fame through naval victories or daring expeditions, Captain

Cid has become known for his fascination with invention.

An enthusiastic and unconventional figure, Cid is regarded as a brilliant mind whose interest in magical machinery rivals his love of adventure.

He is particularly fascinated by the possibilities of machina, the unusual devices and magical innovations that have become increasingly common since the Dragonsfall.

To Cid, the disappearance of the dragons has opened more than ancient treasure vaults.

It has opened the door to discoveries that could change the future of travel itself.

His enthusiasm is infectious, though not everyone shares his confidence in the reliability of experimental inventions.

Those familiar with Cid often describe him as loud, stubborn, and endlessly determined to prove that seemingly impossible ideas can be made real.

THE GULLWING

Cid commands the GullWing, a vessel closely associated with his reputation as an inventor and explorer.

The ship has attracted attention among sailors interested in the growing influence of magical technology upon seafaring.

While traditional captains place their trust in familiar vessels and proven methods, Cid is known for embracing new possibilities.

To some, the GullWing represents an exciting glimpse of what ships may become.

To others, it is a reminder that innovation often brings as many questions as answers.

Regardless of opinion, few doubt that Cid intends to leave his mark upon the age of the Dragonsfall.

LEGENDS UPON THE WAVES

The reputations of these three captains illustrate the many different paths available to those who take to the sea.

Beatrix has earned respect through experience, discipline, and dependable leadership.

Garland commands attention through mystery, fear, and the extraordinary vessel beneath his command.

Cid looks toward the future, pursuing inventions and discoveries that might transform the world of sailing.

Yet they are far from the only captains whose names are spoken in Port Jeuno.

New crews depart its harbor every day, chasing treasures, accepting contracts, and seeking destinations beyond familiar charts.

Some return with fortunes. Others return with stories that seem impossible to believe.

And many never return at all.

A NAME WORTH REMEMBERING

In the age of the Dragonsfall, reputation can be as valuable as a hold full of treasure.

A respected captain may find willing crews, favorable contracts, and welcoming harbors.

A feared captain may command obedience without ever drawing a weapon.

But no reputation is permanent.

Every successful voyage, broken promise, daring rescue, or disastrous expedition adds another chapter to the stories told across the Sea of Swords.

For adventurers arriving in Port Jeuno with little more than ambition, these famous captains are reminders of what a life at sea might become.

One day, their own names may be spoken alongside the legends.

SHIPS AND CREWS

LIFE UPON THE SEA OF SWORDS

MORE THAN TRANSPORTATION

For adventurers exploring the Sea of Swords, a ship is far more than a means of traveling between destinations.

It is a home, a source of income, and often the difference between life and death.

A reliable vessel allows its crew to carry supplies, transport treasure, reach distant islands, and return safely to port.

Yet a ship is only as capable as the people aboard it.

Experienced sailors understand that teamwork, preparation, and trust are every bit as important as strong timber and sturdy sails.

THE CAPTAIN AND CREW

Every successful voyage depends upon people willing to accept responsibility.

The captain makes decisions concerning the vessel's course, safety, and objectives. Other members of the crew contribute their own skills, from navigation and repairs to cooking, lookout duties, and defending the ship.

Adventurers may serve in many capacities.

A skilled fighter might help repel pirates. A spellcaster may prove invaluable during dangerous encounters. A knowledgeable scholar could recognize an ancient landmark or decipher a recovered map.

Even those unfamiliar with sailing can learn to become valuable members of a crew.

LIFE ABOARD A SHIP

Life at sea follows a rhythm different from that of the mainland.

Days may pass with little more than the sound of wind and waves. Crew members maintain equipment, watch the horizon, prepare meals, and attend to the countless tasks required to keep a vessel sailing.

Other days bring sudden danger.

Storms, damaged sails, hostile ships, and unexpected discoveries can demand the attention of everyone aboard.

Long voyages test patience as much as courage.

CHOOSING A VOYAGE

Not every ship sails for the same purpose.

Merchant vessels transport valuable cargo between ports. Naval ships protect trade routes and represent the interests of their nations.

Independent captains accept contracts, pursue rumors, or explore waters beyond established routes.

Pirate crews seek fortune through intimidation, theft, and violence.

For adventurers, choosing which captain or crew to join can shape the opportunities and dangers they encounter.

A wealthy expedition may offer better equipment but demand a greater share of its discoveries. A smaller crew may promise freedom while providing fewer resources.

Every voyage carries its own risks and rewards.

TREASURE AND RESPONSIBILITY

Finding treasure is only part of a successful expedition.

A crew must also bring it safely home.

Recovered wealth may be divided among those who financed the voyage, commanded the vessel, and risked their lives during the expedition.

The terms of such arrangements can differ greatly between captains.

Wise adventurers understand their agreements before setting sail.

An argument over treasure can destroy a crew as surely as any storm.

THE FREEDOM OF THE SEA

For many sailors, the greatest reward of life aboard a ship is freedom.

Beyond the harbor lie countless possible destinations, each offering opportunities that cannot be found upon familiar roads.

A crew may begin as strangers brought together by a single contract.

Over time, they may become companions, rivals, friends, or something resembling a family.

And one day, they may find themselves commanding a ship of their own.

BEFORE SETTING SAIL

Consider what your character can contribute to a crew.

Are they an experienced sailor, a capable fighter, a scholar, a healer, or simply someone eager to learn?

A ship needs many different talents, and even the least experienced adventurer may discover an unexpected place aboard it.
